

Research Project Outline

- Topic: Analyzing the impact of large asset management companies on the housing markets' affordability and accessibility.
- Research Idea: I will be researching large asset management companies to see their involvement in the decline of affordability and accessibility of the housing market. As I am growing to the age of being a first-time homeowner, and with the election coming up, I wanted to take on a related topic to help inform others, but more importantly myself. I aim to understand the effects of large asset management companies' investments on residential real estate, to comprehend the housing market and equip myself to be a competitive renter/home buyer.
- Problem Statement: Large asset management companies' strong presence in the housing markets' affordability and accessibility, is starting to concern many. This trend could diminish existing opportunities for average consumers to purchase properties, or even find affordable rentals. Creating an understanding of the impact these investments have is crucial for our average consumers, future investors and can even help create more awareness for real estate agencies.
- Data Exploration: I hope to successfully collect data on things like transaction volumes, property types, housing/rental costs and geographic areas of large asset management company investment. I plan to create obvious points with this data, on the correlation between housing market trends and large company involvement.
- Knowledge Transfer: I will use the data I find to confirm my written claims. I will very descriptively convey the research to provide first-time home buyers, average consumers, real estate agencies and investors with insights on how large asset management companies might negatively affect the housing market. I hope to, along the way, understand the housing market more and even brainstorm some thought out strategies to navigate through this.
